Customer Reviews

Lacey Sherlock has been plagued with nightmares and is scared of her own shadow since her half-sister, Belinda, was murdered by the San Francisco serial killer called "the String Killer." She decides to do something about it and quits music and a possible career as a concert pianist to major in political science and forensics and later a master's in criminal psychology and join the FBI. The reader is treated to one of her nightmares at the start of the book and it is scary. We come to the present and find Sherlock and partner MacDougal climbing a rope as part of their final physical tests. From this exercise and a scenario in the FBI's "Hogan's Alley", we can see Lacey Sherlock's grit and determination. Lacey meets up with Dillon Savich, head of the Criminal Apprehension Unit, as he poses as the villain in the Hogan's Alley scenario. He admires her "never say die" attitude as he bests her again and again until her partner tosses her a weapon and she "shoots" him -- red paint all over his shirt and tie now. Lacey is excited to be asked to join Savich's unit as while she had wanted to be a Profiler she found that it was just too intense and gory for her. Savich's unit uses computer databasing and modelling -- programs Savich wrote -- to help find patterns and similarities to other crimes to catch criminals that have crossed state lines. The CAU as it is called is asked in by local law enforcement or go in on their own when the crimes become national. Lacey is lucky enough to accompany Savich as his partner is with his wife who is giving birth and go to Chicago to apprehend the killer known as "The Toaster." The process that went into figure out who The Toaster is has been thought out and detailed very well in this plot line.
