Customer Reviews

When you have three growing children under one roof and a crazy husband, farting is as necessary as breathing. Some may find my frankness on the subject cringe worthy, or the book itself and topic. However, let me say this: Everybody farts. Yup! Your grandma, your neighbor, your dog. I'm pretty sure that even Owls fart. Well, maybe not. It's nothing to be ashamed of and it's a fact of life. In my household, there is no shame about it thrown around. Come on, haven't you laughed hysterically at fart noises from someone else? Or even yourself? Shoot, I'm 38 years old and I do! With that said, I loved the last book in the series I read. I love the creativity, silly moments and just poking fun at the most ridiculous moments of life. Since the last one detailed the different types of farts and even some smells, I found it fitting to naturally go to the next question. Where did the first stinky fart come from? If you think about it (and yes I do think about these totally random things with my wild imagination), don't you wonder if the cave people of many moons ago had the same dilemmas we have? Today it's so taboo to fart in mixed company. Well, unless you're in my house! But back then, it was terrifying according to Milo! Milo falls asleep in class again, and he feels his tummy start to rumble. As he dozes off he wonders about the effect of farting when you're asleep. His dreams light up with visions of a cave boy who isn't really popular with the group. He and his pet dinosaur snag up some new berries. From there all the rumblings starts! He's terrified at what is happening to him! Then it happens. The green fog flies as his butt trumpet makes a loud noise!
