This book rates a 4 page review but I am not going to correct all of the oddities. I was given the book as a gift. I read it end to end and I feel like I will never get that time back. Unlike the author I have a true hobby farm ...she is focused on 5 acres which is not enough for 2 cows.....that is the first cause of concern. In short the suggestions are childish at best. She ignores the time it takes to do things....it is hard to describe but a good set of animals and garden can take easily 50 hours a week. She advocates animals as basically yard ornaments which is preposterous and not practical. Llamas are a worthless animal in North America ...the fact that there are dozens on Craig's list for less than the cost of a good roster is something to pause at. Alpaccas are useless and no one buys the wool at a rate marginally close to your time invested...but she focuses on these animals as though you could make a second living ...that is absurd at best. This book reads like a spoiled person who has money to toss out the window . I have a hobby farm and I make a lot of money....from my real job. Following this books for advice is as smart as buying tickets on the Titanic....or you could call Dorothy from OZ...she and the scare crow must have written this fiction. A hobby farm can easily cost you 10 or 20k per year with no return if you approach it like this book espouses. I know this from a decade of hard work on my hobby farm. I'm not an idiot nor am I lazy. I will not drone on other than to say that I recommended meeting real farmers and ranchers where ever you have interest in buying. They can guide you as well as people at the local COOPs for farm stuff. Most importantly I would suggest that you look at moving into this hobby slowly. ...I like my farm but I lose 2-5k per year at least.
